The Lookout:

“Along with an outdoor patio with a view of South Lake Union, Queen Anne, and Puget Sound, this bar and restaurant offers burgers, sandwiches, eight beers on tap, and one of those jukeboxes that conjures any pop song known to humankind out of the ether at the touch of a finger. Drinks do not ascend to the level of craft cocktails, but neither do their prices: a pint-sized jalapeño margarita, made with muddled lime and orange and a handful of sliced peppers, is $7, a gin and juice, $6. Opening weekend featured a Malibu rum promotion with the Malibu rum girls.”

I myself have never been to this joint, but Spermy vouched for it with a “Sweet pinball,” and, frankly, they had me at “pint-sized jalapeño margarita.” Kickstart another fantastic hashing weekend in the great PNW by getting a drinking head start with your best hasher buddies. Come, if for no other reason, than we were promised the story of Jalapenis and how the SPD loved him and his New Year’s Eve shenanigans so much they decided to keep him from haring his hangover hash the next day.
